

Wetwire is out on the scene with a brand new release: Buoyancy

May 2020 - Wetwire is back on the scene with a brand new single release. The new song is titled Buoyancy, and it defines the artist's style and background in a unique way. The track, indeed, features influences as diverse as ambient music, post-rock, electronica, and experimental sounds. The production of this release is particularly impressive. As you can expect from this particular genre, it is really all about nailing the best textures and making the most out of the power of the soundscapes. The tone is genuine and immersive, going for a diverse and one-of-a-kind feel. Wetwire managed to create something quite special here, not only building a wall of sound with beautifully-layered parts, but also taking the listener to a more ethereal dimension.

If you are a fan of fellow artists like Brian Eno, Air, and Cocteau Twin, you are definitely going to enjoy what you hear on Buoyancy. The song has a lot of energy to it, yet the production still maintains a nice, texture-rich tone, which enhances the value of this production, giving the song so much more vibe and attitude to begin with. This is a perfect example of how Wetwire can bring some serious artistry to the music's creative formula, going for a more insightful, personal, and diverse sound when compared to other artists in this particular music genre. Innovation is key here, and Wetwire maintains a distinctive sound that's still fresh and appealing.

Learn more about Wetwire and check out the artist's music, including Buoyancy, which is currently available on the web's best music streaming platforms.

<https://soundcloud.com/wetwiremusic/buoyancy/s-Rn2nmTeSSoo>

2 months ago

Ask me anything