

Wetwire introducing brand new studio single: Out of Darkness.

June 2020 - Wetwire is a group that stands out for its amazing blend of trip-hop, chill-wave and other electronic influences. His sound is refreshing and unapologetic, often setting the bar higher in terms of melodies, but also in terms of textures and sonic soundscapes. The group just announced the release of a brand new single titled “Out of Darkness,” which stands out as a really eloquent example of their vision and creativity. The song features an immersive introduction, progressively allowing the song to build up a solid arrangement, with many textures and landscape-driven sounds, getting more and more intense. What’s special about is that it has a really distinctive approach to the production, not exactly lo-fi, but capturing that warmth, darkness and feel that gives lo-fi music and trip-hop inspired composition that one-of-a-kind touch. “Out of Darkness” is a track with a unique mood, and it represents Wetware’s creative range, and broad sonic scope. One of the most interesting and striking features of this release is definitely its remarkable consistency. Not many artists can easily pul off a project that features such a wide variety of elements and influences. The most obvious risk is that the material can end up sounding quite disconnected and loose - but this is definitely not the case. “Out of Darkness” is a masterful example of sonic layering, and the track allows each element to unfold gently, yet surely throughout the extent of the composition. Wetwire is really good at doing what they does with their compositions, which is mostly creating organic, cohesive, and consistent sonic soundscapes, which really flow well throughout the span of this release. The performances are loaded with passion and integrity, while the production aesthetics are also excellent. The mixing quality is indeed absolutely world-class, with some amazing definition in the top end and lots of punch in the low-end and midrange. The results sound warm and present, yet never harsh or fatiguing, which is quite an amazing achievement, particularly in this genre!
